

Steph Brashear

EMDR THERAPIST & SOCIAL MEDIA CREATOR

THE AUDIENCE ADVANTAGE

Steph has two audiences with one unusual habit: her therapist followers shop for practice tools based on her recommendations, and her client followers send her videos to their own therapists. Half the room controls the budget. The other half influences the referral. One partnership, both sides of the sale. You mean therapy comes with a built-in procurement channel? But we don't have to get into all of that.

ABOUT

Stephanie Brashear is a licensed EMDR therapist, EMDRIA Approved Consultant, and based on the comment sections everyone's parasocial therapist. She talks about trauma, EMDR, and the messier parts of healing the way someone talks when they've actually sat with it. Her audience doesn't just watch. They screenshot, save, and DM her videos to their own therapist.

That kind of trust doesn't come from a content calendar. It comes from credibility and it transfers directly to the brands she chooses to stand behind. But we don't have to get into all of that.

Low follower count, noted. Also: 3M+ views per video. You mean the algorithm just serves it to 3 million people regardless of who follows her? It does. The numbers are in the numbers.

PARTNERSHIP MODEL

Steph doesn't do cringe. When she recommends a product, it's because it genuinely belongs in the conversation she's already having and her audience knows the difference. You mean a sponsored post can feel like clinical guidance? But we don't have to get into all of that. The saves, the shares, the comment sections that run ten days deep and somehow end with three people recommending a therapist: that's what happens when a brand earns its place in the conversation.

LET'S CONNECT

Her followers are mental health professionals who choose the tools and clients who make the referrals. You mean there's a direct line to the people buying practice software and the clients influencing them? There is. No convincing required. No follow-up needed either. She just responds.
